Some of the Things which May be See at the Taylor Building.

The extent and variety of the objects of art and curies now on exhibition at the old octagon may be inferred from the fact that almost a whole evening had passed before two departments, that of art and brienal-brac, were examined. The collection of paintings is of more than ordinary interest. Foremost among the pictures seen on entering the room are "The Holy Family," by Cortona, born 1926, and a portrait of "Bianca Capello," by Bronzino, born 1511. Near these old masterpleces is a small drawleg on the block, by Gustave Dore, bearing his signature. The subject is "Judith with the head of Holoferaes." We next notice a portrait of Gen. Albert Pike, by Elliott, and three portraits by Gilbert Start. One of the mest striking pictures in the exhibition is that by Miss Baker, who now resides in Washington. It is a fancy portrait of a peasant girl with eyes that seem to follow one in passing it. Of this picture, it was remarked by an artist, that, although painted in a broader style, it compares very favorably with a figure of sunch the same character on the opposite side of the room by F. A. Bridgeman, which, considering the eminent station of Mr. Bridgeman in art, was no small compliment to the lady. We notice a genre by Eastman Johnson—'interior of Kitchen at Mount Vernon, and "Cattle," by Peter Moran. A work by J. G. Brown hears the legend: "By the Sad Sea Waves," a sentiment well sustained in the treatment. Upon a mere glimpse of this picture one is impelled to linger and dream of the twilight and the lovely and spirituelle figure, vividity portrayed as to make a deep and lasting impression upon the mind.

Passing to the landscape, one of the largest and most attractive on exhibition is "Reech Woods," by Wahlberg, a scene in Sweden, in which "Order and a proper in the picture one is impelled to done in which "Order and a part in The extent and variety of the objects of a

The New York Herald discusses the question of color in the ball-room, apropos of the coming Inauguration Ball, as follows: "Washington society, official and non-official, has been thrown into consternation by the intelligence that the colored brother is buying tickets for the Inauguration Ball by the thousand, that he means to demand all his rights and privileges under the Civil Rights Bill, and expresses his delight at the installation of a Republican President by tripping it on the colored toe in number four-teen pumps to the fascinating music of the Marine Band. This is an awful condition of affairs, but we figure in the fight. Eliza Pinksten folded in the lov-ing arms of Mr. Sherman was worth to the partry at thousand campaign orators. Now that the battle is fought and won why should the Eliza Pinkstons of the South be debarred from rejoicing over their hard-earmed victory? The negro is in the Senate and in the House of Representatives. He is in the dipplo-matic and consular service, and he is making a hard fight to get into the Cabinet. Under these circum-stances it would be absurd to deny him the precious privilege of being jostled and crushed at an inaugura-tion ball by the Biaines, Hales, Congers, and other statesmen of the Republican party."

Altogether, in the space of the week, there will be nine performances, six in the eventing and three matiners, and all of different operas, miless some work should be enthusiastically demanded to be repeated. This shows at once the extensive reperiodre of the troupe and its resources in the way of artists. In fact we are assured that the organization this season is stronger than ever before, comprising, besides the favorite little prima donna, a new contraite, M'the D'Acona, from the opera houses of Milan and Naples, and Madame Julie Hosewalt; also the first-class tenors, Brignoff and Castle. Besides these well-known artists, the list contains the name of M'lle Pauline Maurel, a first-rate contraito, whose stage presence is remarkably attractive. Therese Marcy, soprano; Lithgow James, baritone; Alonio Stoddard, baritone; Frank Augustine, tenor: Severo Strini, basses: Arthur W. James, burdo baritone. Of the chorus this year it is said that it has been selected with unusual care, "with an eye to beauty and an ear to harmony," from the various vocal organizations of New York, Philadelphia, and Boston. The costumes are stated to be all new and unusually handsome, most of them having been imported from Paris. The orchestra includes some of the best musicians from the Philharmonic Society of New York, the brass instruments being from Gilmore's Band. We are gird to copy from the Ybliadelphia Times this appreciative mention of a great favorite in Washington; "Castle's Don Orsen' is a delightful creation. It has not only the romance and gallantry but the humor that belong to the part. A thoroughly jovial vagabond, he is not the less a cavalier and a gentleman, and from his first roystering appearance to his final triumph the sympathies of the audlence are with him all the time. ever presented. This is not only because the star is a first-rate comedian, character actor, and singer, who could carry the whole burden on his shoulders, but because he has chosen to have a good play, with an intelligible plot, presented by a strong supporting company from the stock of Wallack's, the Globe, Museum, and the Roston Theatres, Daly's and the Union Square, the last named being represented by no less than the charming Miss Carrie McHenry, who plays Faith Hardwicks, the heroine. Mr. Russell is Tom Dilloneny, a horn eccentric, who delights in nothing so much as sudden appearances in strange disguises, in which he often breaks into song. "the bloom upon his paried lips," or rather in this case his facial expression being "funnier than the song." His half-grown boy and venerable spinster are pronounced inimitable. The scene is laid in Connecticut and New York, giving opportunity for characteristic pictures of Yankee life, beginning with the picnic in the first act, where Tom Dilloneny appears in various old shapes "to please the children," but in reality to tickle the audience. "Eigewood Folks," which has been running in Baltimore with great success, will be produced at Ford's Opera House to-morrow evening and during the week.

Blanche Roosevelt, the young American prima donna, is announced for one grand concert at Lincoln Hall, February 26, assisted by a brillant array of artists, all well known to the concert stage. array of artists, all well known to the concert stages. After Miss Roosevelt's great success in Boaton in "The Masque of Pandora," the first English grand opera ever written, we naturally expected to hear her first in opera. Her role of Pandora is said by our great poet, Longfellow, to be "a beautiful perfaction," and as the opera was written for her at his suggestion, we cannot marvel at its complete success. However, as a concert singer, our fair compatriot also stands in the first rank, and we look forward to a thoroughly delightful evening. From the crowned heads of Europe to the greatest living artists, Nilsson and Adelina Patti, this young singer has received special hoors and attention. We feel proud of such a star, and trust that the people will not be outdone in the warmth of their reception by the Old World, which recognize so quickly and appreciate so fully our young American talent.
